Stills, Edinburgh	Talk	Are you a photographer interested in ecology, the natural world or the climate crisis? This will be an informal event in Stills, bringing together photographers and artists to share resources and ideas, allowing connections to be made to support each other in reducing our environmental impact. This might be research around “eco-friendly” photography materials & processes; how photographers are making their practice more sustainable or photographic projects on themes of conservation and the the climate crisis. We welcome attendees to present short 5 minute presentations about themselves or their work, followed by an open discussion around sustainability in photography. Please feel free to attend without doing a presentation as well. All are welcome! Open to all age 16+	7-9pm Free entry If you would like to speak about yourself or your work at the event, please email zoe.hamill@stills.org in advance with a short title/summary of your presentation
Glasgow Sculpture Studios	Talk	Artist Elke Finkenauer, co-founder of Sculpture Placement Group and artist Kate V Robertson, and Director Of Glasgow Sculpture Studios, Mhairi Sawyer, invite you to join them in a discussion around how material practice is evolving. Following the isolation and limitations imposed during the Covid pandemic, we are now all navigating the uncertainties of a cost of living crisis with rising costs and financial uncertainties. At the same time, many artists and makers are considering the environmental sustainability of their material practice. This discussion will focus on how artists and makers are responding to these challenges, what they are considering in their creative processes and material choices. Are artists re-evaluating their practice and doing things differently? How are skills evolving? What facilities and services should be developed to support future, sustainable practice?	6-7pm Free Book via https://www.eventbrite.co.uk/e/thinking-through-doing-sustaining-creative-practice-tickets-616387380247

Scotland's Workshops are open to the public and their teams of committed staff and volunteers work to realise the creative potential of anyone interested in making, from complete beginners to prize-winning artists of international acclaim.

The organisations in the network all individually bring artists together and bring art to the public in the form of classes, exhibitions, workshops and a programme of events. As organisations, they are admired both at home and from abroad for their dedicated expertise and quality facilities. Their contribution to Scotland's international art success is born out of their work for 50+ years with artists here and from around the world.
